

What the 'lock down' meant to me....

As a result of lockdown, at the very beginning there were many mixed feelings and emotions going on inside my head about the uncertainty of the situation. Hearing the news many people dying and suffering throughout this time and people rushing about. It made me think in a different manner of what happens in our world and how much it affects people, and also how lovely it was to see a community coming together to help one another. I think for many of us it was quite unsettling for many reasons but one in particular was seeing others affected and not being able to do the things we normally would.

As the lockdown went on myself and others adjusted more to life in lockdown which made me feel much safer and happier as I started to see people but still being able to keep the 2 metre distance, which was really amazing and I thought to myself when something bad happens you can always get a satisfying positive out of it.
